YO-SEMITE;
OR, SEEING THE ELEPHANT.

BY A RETURNED TRAVELER FROM CALIFORNIA.

(From the Boston Advertiser.)

Ye pilgrims of Yo-Semite
Whose courage nought can daunt,
Push onward to your destiny
And see the elephant.

Though gulfs are deep and walls are high,
And rocks are steep and slant,
You'll never dare go home and say
You've missed the elephant.

White streaks adown the mountain side
Disclose the forms you want;
This is the trunk and that the tail
That makes the elephant.

The rain is drizzling fast and thick,
Be warm or dry you can't—
You wish the gods had gifted you
With hides of elephant.

'Tis getting near the middle night,
Some ease or rest you want,
Such luxuries are not for those
Who do the elephant.

Your empty stomach may suggest
Some dreams of ducks or brant,
Cheer up! in less than half an hour
You'll sup on elephant.

Wearied and worn, and galled and sore,
Your feet on earth you plant,
The lightened horses trot ahead
To seek the elephant.

On foot behind, with many an oath,
You sweat and toil and pant,
And when you think you spot the beast,
Up looms the elephant.

Some shanties made of leaky boards
Take in just half who want
The rest are entertained outside,
Vie ving the elephant.

Your head is mazed, your eyes are dim,
Reflect or feel you can't—
Little care you for scenes and falls,
Or even for elephant.

Long live King Pullman of the cars—
And long live General Grant—
Long live the owls and grizzly bears.
You've seen the elephant! B.

Town or Country!

From the New York Times.

Sixty miles beyond St. Paul is a farm worked by seven sisters. The parents of those girls were both invalids, and very poor. They went from Ohio to Minnesota barely three years ago for their health. Under the Home-tead law the family secured a pre-emption claim of the usual hundred and sixty acres. Moved by a natural sympathy for a family so unfortunately situated, their neighbors helped them to put up a log house, and they were able to hire men to split rails for fencing and to plow the land. All the rest of the work has been done by the seven girls, and last year they sold nine hundred bushels of potatoes, five hundred bushels of corn, two hundred and fifty bushels of wheat, and some six hundred of miscellaneous vegetables. They are now comfortably off, and find time to read books and newspapers.

Now, there may be occupations more suitable to women than those connected with agriculture, but the interesting facts we have related convey a lesson of no slight importance. If a family of women, several members of which are young and weak, can compass within two years such results as these, beginning with absolutely nothing, it is easy to guess what strong men might do. And yet, in the great cities of our Atlantic coast, there are thousands and thousands of stout, hulking fellows who complain that they can get no work, or, what is nearly as bad, who perform in shops those ornamental duties which women can discharge as well, and from which the practical monopoly of one sex necessarily excludes the other. The rapidity with which a comfortable position can be attained in Minnesota, and other Western States, can be partly estimated by considering the rate of growth of the States themselves. It is, for example, barely twenty years since Minnesota was organized as a territory. The population in 1850 was less than 6,000. In 1865 it was more than 250,000, and the new census will show, it is said, a total of half a million souls. Of course, property rises in value in varying proportion to this, but there can be no doubt that any one who settles on fertile land on the old lines of railway, and who is honest and industrious, will amass a competency in ten or fifteen years. The value of real estate in Minnesota is set down in the official reports, made to the State Legislature last January, at one hundred and twenty millions of dollars; it was worth, if anything, only the Government price twenty years ago; and this is a tolerably fair example of the progressive augmentation of values. To reach this swiftly-growing community costs about thirty-five dollars, so that its accessibility to the poor man bears a moderate relation to the cost of establishing himself on arrival. No country in the world offers such twofold advantages as these, and it is strange that as this is the case, so large a ratio of our native as well as imported population should obstruct each other in the great towns.

For those who have their way to make in the world, country life on the broad and fruitful prairies of the West is the most promising and happy that can be adopted. Independence is there within easier reach from small beginnings than in any other locality. A young laborer may leave his Eastern home for the plains beyond the Mississippi, and find himself the possessor of a handsome fortune in early middle age. Such things have been, and will continue to be, until an equilibrium of population is arrived at—and this, even at the present rapid rate of progress, will need several generations to attain. The increasing density of our urban populations—the present corresponding discomforts and high prices, and the future decrease in wages that will result from it—will of course create a direct pressure calculated to thrust superfluous thousands towards lands comparatively empty. But it is unfortunate that, without waiting for such a process, numbers do not now perceive their own true interest, and seek for themselves and their children the health, comfort and independence which are afforded on such easy terms by the smiling prairies of the West.

Medical Counsel in Legal Cases.

BY SUMNER RHOADES, M. D., OF SYRACUSE NEW YORK.

We find the following article in the Philadelphia Medical and Surgical Journal for May. The article is very favorably noticed in the last number of the Nation:

"One morning, four years ago, two lawyers came to my office at Ithaca, N. Y., and requested me to go into Court and help them try a case, in which their clients were under indictment for murder. I said to them, "I have a poor opinion of your case." They answered, "Never mind; perhaps you will think differently after more thorough investigation. However that may be, you must admit that these poor people are entitled to the benefit of every doubt which can be thrown upon the question of their guilt." To this I could only say, "Very well; I will go and assist you, on condition that you will not put me on the stand as a witness." The required promise was given. The work was done; and so successfully, that a verdict of not guilty was obtained, mainly through a fair and skillful cross-examination of the medical witnesses presented by the prosecution.

My observation on that occasion, and some subsequent ones, has convinced me that many times the interests of our client and the honor of our profession, require that the physician acting as counsel in preparing and trying a case at law, should in the outset stipulate that he shall not be required to serve also as a professional witness. Such stipulation obviates the necessity and embarrassment of holding the mind in a judicial attitude and enables him without compunction or conscience to strive like the lawyer to win. It insures open recognition of our services by lawyers, and tends to a better understanding between the two professions. It thus encourages the practice of the unconcealed employment of medical counsel; and this practice relieves the testimony of other physicians from the suspicion of unfairness, which the jury might entertain, if they though the same man was both counsel and witness. It secures a more thorough pre-investigation of the case, and so enables the physicians, who are witnesses, to go to the stand better prepared to meet the questions that may be asked them, thereby diminishing the difference of opinion, real and apparent, which sometimes give much coveted opportunities to our legal adversaries. It has been objected, that the practice I commenced increases the expense of litigation. I answer, the parties must judge whether their interests require medical as well as legal counsel. And if they do, why should not both be paid, rather than one only?

"Medical council can do good service in the preparation, where it may be inconvenient or inexpedient for him to appear personally at the trial. Thus, a few months ago I furnished a brief. for the defense of a physician, since tried at Utica, on a charge of manslaughter, and who has been acquitted.

"My attention has just been specially directed to the subject of this article by a case, tried at the April circuit, at Auburn, N. Y., in which I was counsel for the New York & Erie Railroad Company. They were sued for $10,000, by a man claiming to have been injured on a car thrown from the track by a broken rail. The plaintiff's lawyer, in his able and eloquent address to the jury, did not forget to make the most of the company's having employed medical counsel. His remarks are fully answered by the fact, that within a week, the jury having disagreed, the plaintiff was looking for a surgeon to aid in preparing his case again in October.

"Even when one of the parties is himself a physician, it would sometimes be well for him to employ other medical counsel. For lack of this, a physician of this county was recently beaten in a malpractice suit, the plaintiff obtaining an unjust verdict of $500. The doctor failed to vindicate himself, for the same reason he would fail in the treatment of one of his own children; he was too deeply interested."

Dr. Newton's Performances in London.

Dr. Newton turns up in London. A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette sends an account of his performances at Cambridge Hall, in Newman street:

It was a sorry sight. On the small stage or platform were about a dozen well dressed men and women, whom I took to be the immediate friends or followers of the doctor. The galleries were thronged with an eager crowd, not of the aristocracy. In the body of the hall were some hundreds of ill-dressed men, women and children, a large part of whom seemed to have come for help. In the midst of this crowd was the doctor, with shirt thrown back, his neck bare, and streaming with perspiration. He was vivid with excitement, and aglow with a fury which he says is divine. I gazed intent and amazed. One after another the melancholy company passed towards him. He seized them rudely, handled their eyes, or their ears, or their throat, and shook his stout arms at them and said: "Be healed! pass along!" He seized the legs of the decrepit, made them bend and stoop and stamp; took their crutches and threw aside, telling them "Walk!" He took a palsied woman in his arms, passed his hands over her head, along her body and arms, and placed her back in her chair. All this was done roughly, rudely and absurdly.

These performances continued for a quarter of an hour; then the doctor climbed upon the platform, demanded silence, and addressed the assembly. He told them how he had come thousands of miles to cure and bless them, and all for nothing, out of pure love. He praised the Queen very much indeed. He announced that he could cure the sick in a lump just as well as in any other way, if they would only believe in and love him; and accordingly he went through the performance of ejecting the divine fluid from his fists, in order to cure all who had not yet been cured. He seemed particularly anxious to explain why he perspired so much, as he too obviously did perspire; it was because of the divine influence that worked within him.

During the delivery of this preposterous address, his friends on the platform wiped the profuse perspiration from his brow and ministered unto him. One point of the address I have omitted, and perhaps it is the point. He stated that Mr. ——— of ——— street, had made photographs of him, which he, the healer, had magnetized, and that these magnetized photographs would cure disease as well as he himself could, in the body. He mentioned that these photographs could be had for one or two shillings each, and that he got no share of the profits. The name of the photographer, the street in which he lives, and his number in that street, were afterwards restated with considerable emphasis by another speaker, who advised the people to disperse quietly. He also announced that the healer would remain in England to bless them about one year; and that if he could get a large hall or open ground he would heal them by thousands.

Comparative Warmth of the Sexes.

The Schenectady Star is puzzling itself over the conundrum why girls can dress as lightly as they do and still keep warm, and relates the following startling experience: We once rode with a girl in an open cutter, fifteen miles, on one of the coldest nights in winter, and while we sat frozen nigh as stiff as a stake, our teeth chattering like castanets, she kept up an animated conversation, every now and then exclaiming: "Oh, isn't this delightful! Don't you enjoy it——?" When we arrived at our destination, notwithstanding we were dressed a great deal warmer than our fair companion, she had to lift us out of the cutter and conduct us to the tropical atmosphere of the kitchen of a farm house. On the return trip we were frozen to death, and she drove the corpse home. It must be that girls are tougher than we men people.

A Cellar Well.

A writer in Hearth and Home says; "I dug the well in my cellar in the usual way until a good supply of water was reached; then stoned it up about three feet, making a good reservoir; then inserted a 1½ inch galvanized iron pipe placed some flat stones over the well, and filled in even with the cellar bottom with dirt. This pipe leads directly to the sink, where a good iron pump is attached. The advantages are, pure water, absolutely free from insects or vermin and all surface rubbish, and a saving of the expense of stoning up to the surface. I am very much pleased with the plan."

Snow fell in some parts of Nova Scotia last week. More is expected next week.

It is said the census will show the population of Kansas to be 500,000.

Dickens' Death.

The death of Charles Dickens announced in our dispatches this morning will strike every one, by its suddenness and extent everywhere, a profound feeling of loss and sorrow. For more than thirty years he has been the most widely read and popular writer in the English language. His first book the 'Pickwick Papers' published in 1837 raised him to the pinnacle of English letters as a writer of unbounded genius in every walk of fiction. And from that date his pen poured forth a series of novels, tales and sketches, unsurpassed in number and variety, invention and power of painting and displaying a knowledge of the human character and of the passions of the human heart. Strike out in its entirety Dickens' writings would almost form a volume, and the marvellous of his productions, taken as a whole, never seemed equal to any one of them, only because none could be so full of mellow wit and tender pathos, so fresh and sparkling in style or so full of the spirit of the age. Still unjustly regarded as the friend of the poor, he has endeared to the hearts of every youth, while all his grand force of character and extraordinary radiance, vigor and activity. Capable of ministering some relief to the world's innocent happiness, and delight, his death will cast a shadow upon a loss and affliction. Dickens possessed a strong prediction for the stage and excelled decidedly as an amateur actor. As a public reader his popularity was unbounded. He was a perfect artist in elocution, and his readings in this country some two years ago created a sensation as the first magnitude in all intellectual circles. It remains to be said that Dickens was a profound Christian, a man of earnest preacher of the Gospel of the poor. He has attended many hours visiting and exercised a great many alms in his time, and no writer has ever exhibited a more beautiful devotion to the poor or a more tender sympathy or compassion with every form of poverty and misery. Dickens was a great friend to poor actors and actors, and reduced many to fortune, and was personally popular throughout England. While Democratic in his principles, he was aristocratic in his habits and lived generously and hospitably. Bulwer was a great novelist and like Thackeray died in the harness—pen in hand as it were and the Mystery of Edwin Drood will forever remain a monument. Crowned with fame and with a grand, and possessing the purse of Fortunatus in his prime, open there was all revolt in his lot as that of all the sons of men. There was a fault somewhere in his domestic life and he and his wife lived apart. There is a mystery. It has been common to institute comparisons between Dickens and Scott and Dickens and Thackeray but there can be no parallel because there is little resemblance. With Dickens the whole world was delighted—

They knew no way and cared no warrefore.

He made this a world merrier our old world better. He was a gentle teacher of the virtues and beauty of human kindness. He brought sunshine into poor homes and he peopled the realm of fancy with as real as his or nature's type-pictures as unfading in their interest as if they were living forms.

The Oneida Calamity.

EYRE APPEALS FROM THE SHORT SENTENCE IMPOSED UPON HIM—HE IS CONVICTED AGAINST HIS OWN ADMISSION.

Minister Thorn on has received and forwarded to the Secretary of State copies or communications submitted on the 3d of April last by Captain Eyre of the Dominion, which ran down the United States steamer Oneida last winter and to the Board of Directors of the Pacific and Oriental Steamship Company of London to the Board of Trade for them to forward to the Lords, praying that the slight punishment ordered by the court of inquiry in the case of Captain Eyre be removed, and the board's reply thereto.

The board of directors of the steamship company state that they have had the report of the proceedings in the inquiry under their serious consideration and they cannot but feel that the decision arrived at by the court on the conduct of Captain Eyre after the collision was not warranted by the evidence laid before it. It appears to the board that Captain Eyre, both before and after the collision, did all that a prudent and experienced seaman could do and under these circumstances the board request that the lords of the committee review the evidence taken at the court of inquiry, and give consideration to any statement which Captain Eyre may make and express the hope that they will see fit to return to him his certificate.

The board submit a letter from Captain Eyre, and in that connection state that he has been in their employ eleven years, three years of which as a commander and has always borne the highest character. They state that they are quite unable to express in adequate terms the sad sorrow that an accident in which one of their company's steamers was concerned should be attended by a lamentable loss of life. The most profound sympathy is felt by them for all the citizens of the United States who have unhappily lost relatives or friends by the foundering of the Oneida, but they cannot help entertaining a confident hope that a careful revision of the circumstances of the case will result in the removal or the unfavorable impression which now exists there and here as to the conduct of Captain Eyre in the collision.

In Captain Eyre's memorial to the Board he states that he would have rendered assistance to the Oneida if he had thought she needed it, as he had seven boats capable of carrying from one hundred and ninety to two hundred men and even in his own vessel had been so much injured he could have spared several of them.

In the reply of the Board of Trade the letter states that they are of the opinion after carefully revising the record of the court, that he was guilty of a breach of the thirty third section of the merchant shipping act, which clearly states that all assistance possible in case of collision must be rendered, and are further of the opinion that the sentence of this court in suspending his certificate for six months only, so far from being too severe is more lenient than the gravity of the offence required as well as the enlargement to which they referred, that it amply embodies the dictates of humanity and that in disobeying it he has been guilty not only of an offence created by statute, but of a disregard of the natural duties which circumstances of danger such as that of the Oneida impose upon those who have been the unwilling cause of the danger, and they are especially anxious to express emphatically their sense of the importance of those duties at a time when the increase of rapid steam navigation augments the danger of collision and renders the performance of those duties more imperative.

GOV. GEARY has written a letter to the people asking them to instruct their Representatives not to invade the sinking fund to build new railroads.

The Indian Situation.

From the accounts which we have published of the visit of some noted Indian chiefs to the National Capital, the words addressed to them by Secretary Cox of the Department of the Interior and the reply of Red Cloud it will be seen that our government treats its professions of friendship to the Indians and that Red Cloud is complimentary of the white man's intentions and perfidy. Red Cloud does not seem to be very impressible subject. He demands satisfaction. Military posts are an eyesore to him and he cannot abide railroads. Indeed the entire history and the law of private enterprise between the aborigines and the encroachment of our Northwestern borderers is a tissue of injustice. In spite of treaties of Quaker kindness of Government management the conflict between the two races between civilization and barbarism is a hopeless one and must go on to its inevitable result. The Indian is doomed and the white race must fulfill its destiny.

[illegible] will have [illegible] Blackfoot Indians [illegible] on a special train on [illegible] to visit the White House [illegible] Sunday morning. They will come up the Alleghany River from Pittsburgh in a steamer. Old Cornplanter, Red Jacket, Tall Chief, Big Tree, Red Jacket, Red Dog, Cornplanter, Red Jacket, Red Jacket, Red Jacket
